IV.

While the Noble LORD JOHN was addressing his friends,
 Billy Stares, thought it proper to answer some ends ;
 To hiss like a reptile, a snake in the grass,
 And to bray in applause of himself like an ass :
 Beware, ye Freeholders, of such puppies as he,
 And let what will happen, come vote to be free.

Come vote to be free,
 And let what will happen, come vote to be free.

V.

The honest CLARKE JERVOISE, who his spirit has shown,
 Calls again your support, and has gain'd much renown ;
 May he still to this County be steady and true,
 And guard the Freeholders from so shabby a crew ;
 He claims your protection,---There are few such as he,
 And now let us hasten, and vote to be free.

And vote to be free,
 And now let us hasten, and vote to be free.

VI.

Now a junction is form'd, no more we request,
 As Heathcote and Chute are to freemen a pest ;
 Poor CHEATER will ever have reason to pray,
 That the Noble Lord John may gain ground every day,
 And the honest Clarke Jervoise, who he wishes to see,
 May still protect Hampshire, and vote us all free.

And vote us all free,
 May still protect Hampshire, and vote us all free.

VII.

Now Sir Billy and Chute, we'll bid you adieu,
 Nought but placemen and turncoats will e'er think on you ;
 You are only fit tools for the Minister's club,
 Attended by many a mean dirty scrub :
 From wretches like those, long protected we'll be,
 And in spite of our enemies, vote to be free.

Vote to be free,
 And in spite of our enemies, vote to be free.
